

Net neutrality is vitally important to a functioning democracy. It permits the people to access information, to stay abreast of events in the world and to pursue the happiness that is at the heart of the American experiment. More than 300 million people stand to benefit from our open internet.

Ending that neutrality, which is really just code for dividing up those 300 million for fleecing, is a hand out to a few dozen individuals at a handful of companies. Liberty is more important than the valuation of a couple of blue chip stocks on Wall Street.

Protect our democracy, our ability to better ourselves and this country. Keep our internet free and open to all. Do not ransom our liberty to the highest bidder.
